Applications now available for 2009 Commissioner's School

Rising high school juniors and seniors interested in attending this year's South Carolina Commissioner's School for Agriculture (SCCSA) held at Clemson University can now go online to download applications. The application deadline is May 1.

This is the sixth year Clemson has offered this unique, hands-on program to high school juniors and seniors from across South Carolina and the nation. About 45 students are selected each year and the program gives them a glimpse into academic and career possibilities related to agriculture and natural resources. The 2008 class was the largest class to go through the program with 43 students.

Every five years, the Census of Agriculture takes a picture of South Carolina agriculture and compares it with other states across the nation. USDA Ag statisticians, who we fondly refer to as our "ag bean counters," have crunched the numbers from the 2007 Census of Agriculture and the results are astounding.

The Census of Agriculture was first conducted in 1840. Prior to 1997, the Census was conducted by the Census Bureau. It is the only source of uniform, comprehensive data on agricultural production and operator characteristics for each county, state and for the nation. From 1840 to 1920, the Census of Agriculture was taken every 10 years. Now, the census is taken twice as often, in years ending in 2 and 7 to coincide with other economic census.

Our producers need timely and accurate information regarding trends to plan strategies for a successful future, and the five-year Census of Agriculture gives us a good road map to formulate those plans.

The results of the 2007 Census of Agriculture show that the number of farms in South Carolina has grown by 5% from the last census. That's over 1,300 farms now than we had five years ago. Nationwide the number of farms increased by 4%, but our sister states in North Carolina and Georgia show a decrease in the number of farms. Why has our number of farms increased?

Upstate Water Quality Improvement Cost-Share Project

Agricultural land and livestock owners in selected areas of the Rabon Creek Watershed can participate in a cost-sharing program to help reduce animal waste entering streams as part of a water quality improvement project in parts of Laurens and Greenville counties in the Upstate of South Carolina.

The Rabon Creek watershed is located in the Saluda River Basin near the cities of Laurens, Simpsonville, Fountain Inn, and Gray Court. Four stations in the watershed have been placed on the South Carolina list of impaired waters for violations of the fecal coli form standard.

Player Named Outstanding Young Farmer in South Carolina

C.B. "Pete" Player of Bishopville has been named the Outstanding Young Farmer in South Carolina for 2009 by the SC Young Farmer-Agribusiness Association.

Player, a fifth generation farmer who began working on the farm at an early age, became a full time farmer after graduation from Clemson University and is owner and operator of an extensive agricultural operation. Currently, the farm consists of 410 acres of cotton, 400 acres of corn, 400 acres of soybeans, 200 acres of wheat, 100 acres of peanuts and 580 acres of timber. The farm is a total no-till operation and was one of the first farms in the county to adopt this unique conservation practice..

The reason may be because of higher commodity prices during the census year which allowed more South Carolina operations to meet the definition of a farm ($1,000 or more in sales). Or, it could be that more small farms are producing specialty crops like herbs or it could be that more horse farms were established in the state during that time. Or, it could simply be that more people are getting involved in agriculture as a business. Whatever the reason, we know from the Census that there is more interest in agriculture in South Carolina than ever before and that agribusiness is certainly a growing industry.

Other numbers increased as well, like the average age of a farmer. The average farmer is now 59-years-old. This number puts South Carolina in the top 10 states for having the oldest farmers. This proves the need to encourage our younger folks to become more involved in the business of agriculture. We need to continue to support programs like Ag in the Classroom, SC FFA, 4-H, and the Young Farmers.

At the Department, we encourage young people to enter agricultural careers through activities like the Commissioner’s School for Agriculture. I am proud to say that out of 165 students who have attended the Commissioner's School, over 60% have gone on to attend college or were admitted into a transfer program. About 8% are still in high school, but we have high hopes that they will take a look at a career in agriculture, forestry, or the life sciences.

The Census also revealed that over 4,000 principal farm owners in the state are women, up from the 2002 census. One question I always seem to get when talking about farms is concerning corporate ownership. Most of our farms are owned by individuals or families, not corporations. The trend is that farms nationwide are either becoming larger or are smaller. The middle-sized farm is disappearing from the landscape. The phrase, the era of the "disappearing middle," has been coined by the USDA Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack.

Farmland in South Carolina, according to the Census, is one-third harvested crops and another third is timberland. The other third is in pastureland or is idle - a significant potential waiting for agricultural use. The total amount of farmland in South Carolina has increased by more than 43,000 more acres than five years ago. Nice to see a gain in farmland rather than losing land to non-farm use.

Another question that is often asked is about organic. Almost 1,000 acres on 89 farms were said to be in organic crops and an additional 90 farms on nearly 2,000 acres were being converted. Looks like our state is following the national trend. NASS is planning to conduct a more detailed follow-up survey this summer for organic production in South Carolina.

The Census also revealed that South Carolina has about 12,344 farms with Internet access, but only 7,326 of those farms have high speed Internet. With the push to provide broadband in rural areas, the Worldwide Web should become more accessible to our farming communities. Internet accessibility will allow more farmers to use cyberspace as part of their farming operations in the near future.

Agritourism is growing in South Carolina, becoming a multi-million dollar business in the state. The value of agritourism has increased from $2.7 million in 2002 to over $8 million in 2007. It adds value to farming operations and provides a ripple effect for the economies of rural communities. Spartanburg County was first in agritourism in the state followed by Allendale County.

On behalf of the USDA National Agricultural Statistics Service Census-takers, we thank our farm families for taking the time to complete the Census. Good, accurate reporting is vitally important to agricultural and rural economic development for all who are involved in the business of our state's largest industry - agriculture. Bean counters or bean growers - South Carolina agriculture counts!

SCCSA runs July 18-24, 2009, and students will get hands-on scientific exploration along with workshops related to academic integrity, teamwork, personal growth and leadership. Students may choose academic tracks related to their interests but they also will be exposed to organic food growth, greenhouse production, athletic turf-grass management, animal and veterinary sciences, packaging science, aquaculture, forestry and wildlife and natural resource management. Field trips include visits to university research farms, the Clemson Experimental Forest and rafting on the Chattooga River.

Interested students can obtain an application by visiting <http://www.clemson.edu/cafls/sccsa>. For information about SCCSA, or to provide financial support to this project, contact Katie Black at 864-656-6662 or via e-mail hulse@clemson.edu.

“Those Precious Little Ones Grow Up So Fast...” Forestry Commission Seedlings Are at Peak Hardiness for Winter Planting

Anyone considering purchasing seedlings in bulk from the South Carolina Forestry Commission should act now while those youngsters are at their best age for planting. Even now, supplies of some popular seedling varieties are still good. However, even if quantities of those trees are not an issue, their age soon will be. As winter planting season ends, so too does the seedlings’ peak planting phase. Now is the time to buy those lucrative loblolly pines or those majestic oaks. Learn more by visiting www.trees.sc.gov and clicking on the Seedling Sales link to the left of the page.

Clemson University Seafood HACCP Workshop

The Seafood HACCP workshop will be held at the Livestock-Poultry Health Building in Columbia, SC on March 16-18, 2009.

Cost is $200 per person and includes 2 reference books.

Individuals may sign up by contacting the Food Science and Human Nutrition Department at Clemson for additional information. The departmental phone number is 864-656-3397.

Asparagus Roll-ups

14 slices white bread, crusts trimmed	zest of one lemon, finely grated (grated lemon rind)
4 tbsp. crumbled bacon	28 asparagus spears, cooked till tender
8 oz. cream cheese (room temperature)	melted butter

Flatten bread slices with a rolling pin. Combine bacon, cream cheese, and lemon zest. Spread an even layer of the cream cheese mixture on flattened bread slices. Place asparagus spears on bread slice. Roll each slice like a jellyroll. Cut each roll in half and place seam side down on a lightly greased cookie sheet. *Preheat broiler. Brush the tops and sides of the rollups with melted butter. Broil 6 inches from heat until lightly browned and toasted. Serve immediately. *Can be prepared up to 3 horrs in advance. Store in refrigerator.

Upstate Cost-Share Project

The situation will be addressed by providing cost-share assistance to agricultural landowners to encourage the installation of selected best management practices (BMPs) designed to reduce animal waste entering streams through alternative watering sources.

The Upper Savannah Council of Governments (USCOG), Clemson Extension Service, Laurens Cattlemen's Association, and Laurens County Water & Sewer Commission (LCWSC) are working together on the water quality improvement project that began in late 2007.

USCOG is the lead organization for the $291,787 grant awarded from the S.C. DHEC Bureau of Water to fund the Rabon Creek Total Maximum Daily Lead Implementation Project. Clemson, LCWSC and other cost-sharing participants are providing $194,525 in matching funds.

The goals of the project are to address these fecal coli form reductions through cost share assistance and education of area residents. The project is focusing on livestock and other animal waste, residential septic systems, illicit discharges and storm water.

In cooperation with local livestock associations, educational programs will be held to educate owners of agricultural enterprises about fecal coli form loading of the specific watershed, and best management practices that could reduce fecal coli form from agriculture related enterprises.

Contacts from these educational efforts will result in site visits to further encourage growers to voluntarily participate. Direct mail-outs to livestock producers will be utilized to educate producers emphasizing the principles in the Farm-A-Syst program.

Additionally, personal farm visits will be conducted to recruit potential livestock producers to participate and install BMPs to reduce animal waste in the streams of the watershed.

Once a grower chooses to participate, a site visit will be made to develop a farm plan to include BMPs that will reduce fecal coli form loading from his or her farm.

Activities that can be included in the cost share program include waste management systems, waste storage facilities, waste storage structure, composting facility, critical area planting, closure of waste impoundment, fencing, field borders, filter strips, use exclusion, mulching, roof runoff management, spring development, nutrient management, tree/shrub establishment, waste utilization, riparian forest buffer, pipeline, heavy use area protection, stream channel stabilization, pest management, trough or tank, wells, and prescribed grazing.

The cost share program also covers malfunctioning septic systems that can cause accumulation of waste on the surface and ultimately runoff into nearby streams. Malfunctioning can be caused by improper tank size, failure to follow recommended pump schedule, inadequately designed drain field, driving vehicles across drain field, or poor drainage of surface water over drain field.

For more information about the cost-sharing programs and if you qualify, contact the Laurens County Clemson Extension Service at 864-984-2515.

Young Farmer

An outstanding agricultural leader, Player is an active member of the Lee County Young Farmer and Agribusiness chapter. He also serves as a commissioner of the Lee County Conservation District, a director of the Lee County Farm Bureau and a director of the Farmers Telephone Cooperative.

Player’s wife, Marie, assists with the farming operation as office manager. Their daughter, Kayla, became an integral part of the operation in 2005.

Don Boice, an official with ArborOne Financial in Florence, presented the award to Player at the recent annual conference of the SC Young Farmer and Agribusiness Association held in Myrtle Beach on behalf of the Farm Credit Associations in South Carolina.

Player’s Young Farmer-Agribusiness advisor is Beth W. Tolson, agricultural education instructor at the Lee County Career and Technology Center.
